The veil is coming off of Cary Tamarkin's once-mysterious High Line condo at 550 West 29th Street as it gears up for a fall sales launch. (Core is handling sales and marketing.) The development, which replaced a low-rise building, will have 19 units—a mix of standard apartments, duplexes, and penthouses—starting at $3.6 million; the penthouses, which will range from 2,950 to nearly 4,000 square feet, will go for more, with the priciest asking $15 million. The building's amenities will include a fitness room and sauna, bike storage, and a 24-hour attended lobby.
